

Senior Analyst

Job Description

eMAX Health, a fast-paced, rapidly growing healthcare research consultancy is seeking a Senior Analyst to work across its Outcomes Research and Market Access business lines for its major pharmaceutical clients.

About eMAX

Founded in 2004, eMAX Health has a record of delivering high-quality independent research in support of pharmaceutical product commercialization objectives. eMAX Healthcare Research and Analytics™ focuses on global health outcomes, health information technology, pricing and market access, marketing research & business development support. eMAX Health Network™ provides specialty pharmaceutical access programs such as copayment assistance coupons, physician-office debit cards as well as other non-personal promotional products and services.

Responsibilities

Implementation and management of various aspects of research projects including:

- development of analysis plans and study design,
- oversight and management of outcomes research using administrative claims, including management of SAS programmers, collaboration with biostatisticians and study advisors
- development of economic models including simulation models, decision trees, cost-effectiveness analyses
- preparation of narrative study reports, manuscripts as well as summary presentations
- participation in client study meetings and presentations
- participation in business development activities including writing proposals
- participation in client discussions and meetings

Education and Experience

An advanced degree with at least 3-5 years of experience. Ideal candidate will have extensive practical experience working on research assignments for the pharmaceutical industry and will possess both quantitative and qualitative skills and has experience programming in statistical packages.

Computer Skills

MS Word, PowerPoint, Excel; familiar with software used for discrete event simulation, or other modeling software, as well as data analysis software.